

Contents

- Foreword 7
- Chapter 1: *The 'twin banana' 11
The long road to equal rights in South Africa.
A brief history.
- Chapter 2: *Stoking the fire 60
Hot on the heels of South Africa's monumental changes, the Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe comes out of the closet as the commander-in-chief of Africa's anti-gay brigade. The ensuing witch-hunt is locking horns with the forces of change.
- Chapter 3: *You say yes, I say no 81
A ritual dance to the same tune. With an unwillingness to compromise and little enthusiasm to see the opposing view, the warring parties are each claiming the upper hand by using 'facts', anthropological discoveries, interpretations of religious texts, and assumptions based on characteristics of 'the' African culture.
- Chapter 4: *Is Africa different or just the same? 94
Men are women and footballers aren't. Fantasies run wild regarding an assumed African sexuality. But is Africa really so different?
- Chapter 5: *An obsession extraordinaire 113
The battle for the heart of the Anglican Church. African bishops are feeling short-changed. Exclusive: an interview with the former Archbishop Desmond Tutu.

Chapter 6: All welcome: porn in the church! 129

The alliance between evangelicals, politicians and the Ugandan first lady. Now that Christian fundamentalists are losing ground in the United States, a cultural war against homosexuals has been relocated to the 'dark continent'. Do Africans really believe everything that white evangelicals tell them? A look behind the scenes in Uganda.

Chapter 7: "Sodo-Miites" 169

A glimmer of pink light is coming into view on Africa's horizon. Which of Africa's (former) rulers are speaking out for tolerance and equal rights? Contemporary African literature is a half-closed book for homosexuals. Also: the 'pink soaps' coming out of Nollywood, and the international breakthrough of gay and lesbian photographers and artists.

Chapter 8: Relationship issues 195

Their struggle, our struggle. Subsidies and solidarity. At the end of the nineties the gay English-Nigerian footballer Justin Fashanu took his own life in a lock-up garage in London. To Fashanu, Britain had nothing to offer. These days, British politicians are quick to condemn homophobia anywhere in the world. An account of a trying relationship burdened with a history of colonial oppression and domination. Also: the role of donors, diplomats and do-gooders.